Baldwin, Robert, 1804-1858. Born and educated at York, he studied law and was called to the bar in 1825. Entered public life in 1829, when he was elected to represent York in the Assembly of Upper Canada. Defeated following year.

Baldwin was a consistent reformer, but had no sympathy with the Rebellion of 1837-1838, or with the extreme views of William Lyon Mackenzie and his associates. He headed an agitation against the governor, Metcalfe, which led to the formation of the Reform Association, whose main plank was the application of the principles of the constitution of the mother country to Canadian affairs.

In 1874 was again elected for York.

Although he had opposed the Rebellion, Baldwin supported in the legislature both the Amnesty Act and the Rebellion losses Bill.

at Huron
Although the instructions from the Surveyor General's department were that a certain road allowance then extending in a Northerly direction from near the mouth of the river Credit &c.

and running each way to the center, although it left many unsightly jogs in the side-lines, not the fault of the subsequent local surveyor's but rather perhaps the fault of the chain bearers in the original survey &c.

But the center road in Chinguacousy was started at the base of the township where the said street road terminated in Toronto Twp. This was owing to the strict orders from the department that the said street road must be straight as it was at that early date intended for a public thorough fare from lake to lake and that was the cause of the first concession east being narrower in Chinguacousy than in Toronto &c.

Survey the remainder of Chinguacousy and Esquesing which was immediately proceeded with on the same plan allowing for a sideroad every five lots &c.
